GANS-McGOVERN MYSTERY

CHICAGO—A prize ring mystery of 30 years' standing—the Joe Gans-Terry McGovern fake at the old Faterals, is still fresh in the minds of old time Chicago fight fans. That is, it remains as "fresh" as any event of its malodorous proportions could well be.

Here was a fight so palpably fixed that it ended boxing in Chicago for practically 25 years. Chicago has stood for many kinds of rackets. There have been rings, and intrigues and sporting events of every hue and description, yet here was a single, isolated "barney" that "went over" in such a way that a fair-minded public was always ready to acquit at least one of the principals of having any knowledge or suspicion that the fight was fixed.

Terry McGovern was never accused of being a party to any shady transactions. He was always out to win. The rugged little terror from Brooklyn knew only one way to fight—to win in and slaughter his unfortunate opponent.

And poor little Joe Gans—the "Old Master," black of skin and white of heart. Perhaps Joe had a "guilty knowledge"—perhaps he knew he had been boiled and steamed down to a point that made him an easy set-up for such a roaring little slugger as Terry, even if at the weight Joe still had a seeming beat of several pounds.

All Herford was manager for Gans. It is true that later on Herford carried Gans to the light weight championship, helped to develop him into the greatest man of his poundage in the world ever knew. But it is no way exculpated the happenings of that long ago night, when thousands of fans paid what was then regarded as "the limit"—meaning $3 for the best seats, with plenty of others going at $2 and even "eight bits" for the gallery seats.

Here was the "set up"—Gans was naturally a "light" light-weight while Terry was gaining pounds and could no longer make the weights he did for Dixon, "Little Chocolate" and Billy Plimmer, from whom he had won the world's featherweight title.

Probably the night Terry met Gans he was at the very peak of his sensational form—and the weight more than 125 lbs. Herford volunteered to bring Gans under 130 for the match and it set the fans all over the world into a frenzied excitement.

It was distinctly a hallowed bout. Runners were sent out into the battle belt to tell the sports what wonderful condition Gans was in. The tradition that a good big man can always take a good little man was the upshot also in the hole held by the Gans backers.

Poor little Joe; he came into that ring quaking; some said it was from weakness; but others said it was shame and fear on the part of the great Baltimore Negro because his friends, the public he loved so well, were about to be betrayed.

There was absolutely nothing to the fight. Terry tore in—hammered Gans cruelly and knocked him completely out in a couple of the round rounds the boxing game every away. The next day the scandal broke. Terry, proud of his conquest, soon realized that he had been a party to a shameful deal. It nearly broke his heart. In fact, Terry's star was never so bright after that night. A few months later he found young Corbett, the shark of the ring, and was knocked cold in the second round. Terry, you know, had a glass jaw. Corbett knew it. All he wanted was one punch. He knew how to get it.

He turned McGovern, spit his face, called him vile names. He tore in and Corbett found the opening and laid the champion low for the first time in his career. The fight was still a big drawing card, but lost again to Corbett and then went down the hill fast.

Mayor Harrison ordered the fighters out of Chicago and through many administration boxing, even exhibitions were barred. The police refused to issue any more licenses.

Now this may be a coincidence. But the same kind of a deal was seen in the case of Joe Walcott, another unbeatable Negro champion—the best welter-weight of all time. Walcott, also believed to be a tool of gamblers, was trained down far below his natural fighting weight in order to fight Kid La Vigne, then lightweight champion. It was a different kind of fight, but Walcott, drained of his strength, was finally knocked out by the vigorous slashing bruiser LaVigne.

He fought many years afterward but that LaVigne fight was always a blot on his wonderful record.

Wall Street Planning Co-operative Farming

NEW YORK—The attention of Wall Street is being directed with new intensity toward the question of corporation farming. It is not a new subject, but Henry Ford's espousal of the scheme served to bring the matter strongly before important financiers, and it is reported in high financial quarters here that proposals are now being considered for the organization of a company which will attempt to put plans for a big farming corporation to a practical test.

Meanwhile, what effect, if any, the anti-trust laws have had in connection with corporation farming is being considered.

The subject is one in which financial New York is greatly interested. Development of this interest is contained in the current number of the Index, official house organ of the New York Trust Company, of 100 Broadway. Just out, it places the stamp of New York Trust Company's approval on the scheme, which it characterizes as "one of the more practical methods of squeezing prosperity from the soil."

What Corporate Farming Means
"The theory of corporate farming suggests the superimposing of corporation management on a number of farm units for the general purpose of developing greater efficiency through the application of more scientific methods than are possible in a small farm," it says. It declares that aside from this the scheme embraces the advantages of co-operative buying and selling and has the merit of attracting outside capital.

The Index reviews briefly the trend in the western states toward the cultivation of large units by an individual owner and says that in Montana "consolidation is reducing the number of what farms by about half." It calls attention also to the Henry Ford farms and quotes Mr. Ford as saying, in his description of one of these farms, that "in ploughing them we are staving 50 or 60 tractors in a line."

"They are run by men taken out of the factories and paid the usual factory wages," it quotes Mr. Ford as saying. "The essential operations of the farm are done in this fashion, and altogether we do about 15 days' work in a year and keep the land in a high state of productivity."

Recognizes Economic Unit
"Corporation farming, however, is not merely large-scale farming," it continues. "While corporation farms usually are large farms, the latter need not be, and, today, generally are not, corporations. The corporation farm, for one thing, recognizes an 'economic unit' in farming, the dimensions of which cannot be exceeded."

"This unit may vary according to the nature of the land, climate and crops, but within these considerations it is absolute. In other words, corporation farming attempts to concentrate, in the hands of one man, the defined area of land it constructs an efficient business bureau for the dispensation of capital, the marketing of goods and the direction of the work."

The Index cites the Campbell Farming Corporation of Montana as offering a standard example of the new principle that "modern farming is 90 per cent engineering and 10 per cent agricultural." This corporation, which was formed in 1921, is said to be the largest wheat-growing unit in the world, controlling 100,000 acres of Montana land.

"Among its economic advantages," the Index continues, "corporation farming offers a means whereby the farmer may have the same access to industry to the nation's abundance of capital. Large operators can invariably find capital more readily than the isolated individual working on a small scale."

Hanks Favor the Plan
Hanks and lending houses are in the corporation farm, producing a single commodity such that is similar to, or identical with, the leading industries of the nation with which they have long been dealing, and in the workings of which they have confidence. Corporation farms also maintain an accounting system like industrial corporations and thus can give a better picture of their operations when seeking credit than the average farmer is able to do."

"Another advantage," the Index goes on, "is that large type farming can make profitable use of machinery and equipment. For economical farming, it has been found that the cost of machinery should be kept within $10 per acre, and the larger the unit the less the investment per acre."

"With regard to the 'debatable question' of the laborer in corporation farming, the Index says: "While corporation farming no doubt offers a higher standard of living to its employees, since it can afford a generally higher salary, it has not entirely fulfilled its claim that it stimulates production by inducing workers together in competition and by offering incentives of bonuses and promotion."

The Employee Problem

Since farm work has never been standardized to a routine, responsibility in a hired worker is apt to be rare. With more employees, personal supervision becomes proportionally difficult; the small farmer, with a few men under him, can generally direct all the work personally. The corporate director can do this, but he must rely on the fact that his workers will not only finish their job responsibly, but will look after the equipment themselves."

The America and Sharon Land Company, near Fargo, N.D., illustrates, the Index says, the actual workings of a corporation farming. "This company," it continues, "owns over 35,300 acres, representing for the most part a composite block of 36 strains of land, including the village of America, which it has built itself. It is supervised by a general manager, subject to the authority of a board of directors. He has supervision over eight different departments—engineering, grain and seed, accounting, etc."

"In addition to the area occupied by headquarters buildings and an experimental farm, the company's land is subdivided into 65 tenant holdings. The average size is about 500 acres a farm. The tenant can direct his work independently, but must adhere to the conditions laid down."

Scope of Contract

For example, the contract specifies that crops are to be planted and produced for a certain return, the crops arranged to the best collective advantage of the institution. There are likewise certain special obligations which include hauling and spreading, at the landlord's direction, all manure made on the farm, hauling all threshing straw to the elevators, and keeping the farm property and adjacent roads free of weeds.

"The results achieved by this company can best be traced from the averages for 16 tenant farms, for which continuous records are available from 1886 to 1926. The annual net return is little over 10 per cent of the original investment on the land in 1886, or a little over 3.8 per cent of the present land value."

"Although the experience of this company has been fairly successful, all of the foregoing indicates that the farm corporation movement has not yet proved itself."

The Farm Economics Association has advised as an alternative to corporation management, according to the Index, that farmers follow the practice already adopted in the richer western areas of the co-operative hiring of management specialists.

"This idea of hiring a specialist on a co-operative basis," the Index comments, "offers the opportunity to combine two essential features governing agriculture. One is that agriculture has been and, by its very nature, is likely to remain less standardized than industry; it therefore requires more supervision and initiative in details than is necessary in industry."

Risk Personnel Needed

"On the other hand, the progress of agriculture science requires persons able to understand it and willing to apply it. Such persons are relatively few, and their talents might be invested most effectively if applied to as large an organization as possible."

Public education and average initiative will determine. The Index holds, which alternative is adopted. Those farmers, it says, who are educated to appreciate the importance of agricultural science have a good ground work for the development of and probably will be more successful at the co-operative method.

It also holds that the corporation farm might well offset the disadvantage of lack of education and the consequent lack of interest, initiative or care on the part of hired farm laborers or tenant farmers. Ultimately, it suggests, the corporation farm "may even be a method by which farm workers may be educated so as to appreciate the value of modern agriculture."

ARTIFICIAL COTTON MAY REVOLUTIONIZE INDUSTRY

LONDON.—Far-reaching changes in the cotton industry are promised by the discovery, which the aid of a nesting bird in British Guiana, of a substitute known as "artificial cotton."

"Artificial cotton" comes from a weed discovered by C. J. Hedley-Thornton and Gaston de Fleury, chemists, when they noticed a bird's nest in British Guiana lined with cotton-like material. Months of patient observation enabled them not only to discover the weed from which the bird got the material, but its precise method of transforming it.

For more than a year it has been grown in England. Arrangements have been made for growing and marketing it in Holland, Switzerland, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Spain, Portugal and the French colonies in North Africa. In addition, Hedley-Thornton, head of the company which controls the discovery, says orders have been received for more than one billion pounds, although but 80,000,000 pounds can be produced this year.

"Artificial cotton" can be raised, it is claimed, to yield 700 to 800 pounds per acre and to sell at a fixed rate of 12 cents a pound, whereas real cotton grows about 400 pounds to the acre and in Lancashire sells at 20 cents a pound.

The roots and leaves of the weed provide sufficient revenue to justify the growing of the plant, with the fibre cotton producer merely as a by-product, so that in case cotton growers should reduce costs to meet the 12-cent price, the "artificial cotton" could be sold as low as two cents a pound, Hedley-Thornton declared.

The artificial product is represented as requiring only one-third the amount of dye as real cotton. It can be raised as far north as Canada.

-Electric Refrigeration- Is Now a Necessity No Longer a Luxury

Electric Refrigeration is a frequent subject of conversation these days. Advertisements emphasizing its advantages are met with everywhere. From a tiny business, an enormous business has grown, and Electric Refrigeration is being accepted as a necessary part of home equipment.

Tests by Government Experts show that at a temperature above fifty degrees germs multiply rapidly, whereas at the ideal temperature of forty-five degrees, the growth of germs is almost totally arrested.

In many ways the maintenance of an ideal refrigerating temperature may be of benefit to you and to your family.

The fresh fruits and vegetables you buy so eagerly can be kept fresh and crisp for many days in an Electric Refrigerator.

Your meats will hold their richness and freshness far better.

Milk is perhaps the most perishable thing you buy, yet you can keep milk fresh and sweet for days.

As foods keep longer, you are able to buy less often, and in quantities and at sales, with substantial savings.

For the social afternoon, dinner or evening party, salads and other frozen dainties may be prepared in advance, and kept in an Electric Refrigerator, ready to be served when desired.

No more tiring trips to the basement or to the outer porch, for an Electric Refrigerator may be placed anywhere in your kitchen.

Amusing delays caused through the ice man are eliminated, for the Electric Refrigerator operates without attention, day or night, summer and winter.

You can take your week-end trips, leaving your Electric Refrigerator well stocked, and be assured that when you return everything will be fresh and sweet.

It declared that aside from this the scheme embraces the advantages of co-operative buying and selling and has the merit of attracting outside capital.

The Index reviews briefly the trend in the western states toward the cultivation of large units by an individual owner and says that in Montana "consolidation is reducing the number of wheat farms by about half." It calls attention also to Henry Ford's plans and quotes Mr. Ford as saying, in his description of these farms, that "in ploughing them we string 50 or 60 tractors in a line."

"They are run by men taken out of the factories and paid the usual factory wage," it quotes Mr. Ford as saying. "The essential operations of the farm are done in this fashion, and altogether we do about 15 days work in a year and keep the land in a high state of productivity."

Recognizes Economical Unit "Corporation farming, however, is not merely large-scale farming," it continues. "While corporation farms usually are large farms, the latter need not be and, today, generally are not, corporations."

The corporation, for one thing, recognizes an "economical unit" in farming, the dimensions of which cannot be exceeded.

"This unit may vary according to the nature of the land, climate and crops, but within these considerations it is absolute. In other words, corporation farming attempts to control the risk scientifically; upon a defined area of land it constructs an efficient business bureau for the dispensation of capital, the marketing of crops and the direction of the work." The Index cites the Campbell Farming Corporation of Montana as offering a standard example of the new principle that "modern farming is 90 per cent engineering and 10 per cent agricultural." This corporation, which was formed in 1921, is said to have a large tract in growing in the world, controlling 100,000 acres of Montana land.

"Among its economic advantages," it continues, "the corporation farming offers a means whereby the farmer may have the same access to capital, the nation's abundance of capital. Large operators can invariably find capital more readily than the isolated individual working on a small scale."

Banks Favor the Plan Banks and lending houses see in the corporation farm producing a staple commodity much that is similar to so-called identical with, the leading industries of the nation with which they have long been dealing, and in the working of which they have confidence. Corporation farms also maintain an accounting system like industrial corporations and thus can give a better picture of their operations when seeking credit than the average farmer is able to do."

"Another advantage," the Index goes on, "is that large type farming can make profitable use of machinery and equipment. For economical farming, it has been found that the cost of machinery should be kept within $10 per acre—and the larger the unit the less the investment per acre."

With regard to the "debatable question" of the laborer in corporation farming, the Index says:

"While corporation farming no doubt offers a higher standard of living to its employees, since it can afford a generally higher scale of wages, it has not entirely fulfilled its claim that it stimulates production by bringing workers together in competition and by offering incentives of bonuses and promotion."

The Employee Problem Since farm work has never been standardized to a routine, responsibility in a hired worker is not to be found in a few men under him, can generally direct all the work personally. The corporation director can not, and he must rely on the fact that his workers will not only finish their jobs responsibly, but will look after the equipment themselves."

The Anemia and Sharon Land Company, near Fargo, N.D., illustrates, the Index says, the actual workings of a corporation farm. The company is continuing to acquire over 35,300 acres, representing for the most part a composite block of 36 sections of land, including the village of the anemia, which it has bought. It is supervised by a general manager, subject to the authority of a board of directors. He has supervision over such different departments—engineering, grain and seed, accounting, etc.

"In addition to the acre occupied by headquarters buildings and an experimental farm, the company's land is subdivided into 65 tenant holdings. The average size is about 500 acres a farm. The tenant can direct his work independently, but must adhere to the specifications laid down."

Scope of Contract

For example, the contract specifies what crops are to be planted and provided for a certain rotation of crops arranged to the best collective advantage of the institution. There are likewise certain special obligations, which include hauling and spreading at the landlord's direction, all manure made on the farm, hauling all threshed grain to the elevators, and keeping the farm property and adjacent roads free of weeds.

"The results achieved by this company can best be traced from the averages for 16 tenant farms, for which continuous records are available from 1906 to 1920. The annual net return is little over 10 per cent of the original investment on the land in 1906, or a little over 3 per cent of the present land value."

Right Personnel Needed "The Farm Economics Association has advanced as an alternative to corporation management, another plan. The Index, that farmers follow the practice already adopted in the richer western areas of the co-operative hiring of management specialists."

"This idea of hiring a specialist on a co-operative basis," The Index comments, "offers the opportunity to combine two essential features governing agriculture. One is that agriculture has been and, by its very nature, is likely to remain less standardized than industry; it therefore requires more supervision and initiative in details than is necessary in industry."

On the other hand, the progress made by agricultural science requires persons able to understand it and willing to apply it. Such persons are relatively few, and their talents might be invested most effectively if applied to as large an organization as possible.

Public education and average initiative will determine. The Index holds, which alternative is adopted. Those farmers, it says, who are educated to appreciate the importance of agricultural science have a good ground work for the development of and probably will be more successful at the co-operative method.

It also holds that the corporation farm might well offset the disadvantage of lack of education and the consequent lack of interest, initiative or care on the part of hired farm laborers or tenant farmers. Ultimately, it suggests, the corporation farm "may even be a method by which farm workers may be educated so as to appreciate the value of modern agriculture."

Do You Buy Advertised Goods?

Of course you do; everybody does. Just run over in your mind the various articles that you have purchased in the last week or the last month. How about foods? Your breakfast fruits, cereals and bacon are all advertised. Probably that is how you first came to know of them—through advertising. Probably the shoes you are wearing, or the dress or suit you have on are equally well-known advertised makes, and you are proud of them.

In the home. On the floor are rugs and linoleum—the better wearing kinds are extensively advertised. What about the kitchen? Aluminum ware, gas ranges, hot water heaters, dish and clothes washers, cooking utensils of all kinds—practically everything you use is advertised. You buy advertised products because you have confidence in them. You know that a manufacturer cannot afford to advertise shoddy or unworthy merchandise.

Advertising is one form of insurance. It gives you a feeling of perfect confidence and safety when you ask for an advertised brand, for you know that you will get the quality and service you expect. The name is a guarantee.

The more you read advertising the more you will know about human progress. You will become well posted in almost every line of human endeavor and a canny judge of values. Reading advertisements is a fine habit. Cultivate it.

Sunday night Ray Melvin's car was taken from in front of his residence, and an old car left in its place. Ray was up before breakfast that morning and gave Constable Wallace an early call. The car was finally located at Standard, where it had been left and a Nash car taken in its stead. No other depredation has been reported in Strathmore, but apparently an attempt was made at Standard to break into the butcher shop. The police are very active on the Calgary Highway, but so far these "night performers" have succeeded in evading the peopled guardians. The activity of the police is not a pipe dream. For further proof apply to Chester A. Lydall or Roy Grey, who will be pleased to vouch for same. Jim Swanson, of Standard, might have been pinched in connection with the loss of Ray Melvin's car, which was fair play. Standard, Constable Wallace discovered the car very close to the window where the "popular Jim" was peacefully slumbering the sleep of an honest man. Jean Kimmeth vouches for James' virtuous character. He referred the Constable to his Haughey and May Miner, of Cheside, former employers. Roy says that not only is Jim painfully honest, but that he was the hardest working employee he ever had, one who kept him kept up all the time, fearing that Jim would overwork himself.

NEW HOG-GRADING REGULATIONS PASSED

OTTAWA—The Hon. W. R. Motherwell announced that the new hog grading regulations, which have been under consideration for some considerable time by the department have been passed by Order in Council, and become law throughout Canada after publication in the Canada Gazette.

The former hog grading regulations after six years of application, brought about a marked improvement in Canadian hogs so that today the majority of hogs are of a better type of bacon type. This improvement made it necessary to make some revision of the grades so that the hogs would be graded to meet as possible in accordance with their actual commercial values.

Classification

The new regulations provide for the classification of hogs into two classes, namely, bacon hogs and non-bacon hogs. The bacon class is to be divided into two grades to be known as "Select" and "Bacon". The standard for "Select" hogs remains the same except that the minimum weight of 170 pounds W.O.C. or 160 pounds F.W. has been raised ten pounds. Experience has shown that hogs of bacon conformation and type are not sufficiently finished at the old minimum weights for this grade.

The second grade of bacon hogs which is to be known as "Bacon" is to be the same in weight range as the old select grade, namely 170-220 lbs. W.O.C. or 160-220 lbs. F.W. This is a new grade, and the hogs must be of the same general characteristics as select bacon hogs, but may lack somewhat in length or in general quality, as compared with select. This grade will take care of the better qualities of hogs now going into the thick, smooth grade, and should help to provide encouragement to the hog producer, who has introduced bacon blood into his herd, but has not yet had time to achieve a select hog standard.

The third grade, or first grade in the non-bacon hog class, is to be known by the name of "Butcher's". Weight range of this grade is 150-220 pounds W.O.C. or 160-240 pounds F.W. and will include all hogs of smooth fleshing and good finish not conforming to the standards for the bacon grades. This grade will take in the heavy end of the present shop hog grade, and the light end of the heavier. The grades of out weight hogs are the same except where minimum weight adjustment is required.

After Mr. W. Kempf on May 1st.

After two years' trial a canary was hatched by Mrs. Kempf's bird, and was told it is a wonderful sign! Orders are being booked for the next hatch.

ments have been made to conform to the maximum weights of the new grades. The shop hog grade, now that the best end has been placed with the "Butcher's", is eliminated, and in future hogs under 150 pounds W.O.C. or 160 pounds F.W. will be classed as lighters or feeders, and buyers may select their filling requirements in this class of hog from the grade.

"Select" and "Bacon"

The packers have undertaken to try to maintain the spread of fifty cents between the "Select" and "Bacon" grades, and all other grades have been left to find their own market level in accordance with the principle agreed to at the 1929 swine conference, and confirmed again at the conference in 1927.

Compulsory Grading

The new regulations also provide for the compulsory grading of all hogs at local shipping points in accordance with the official grades. During the past year the Federal Department has had an opportunity to test out the practicability of country grading, and are satisfied that it is feasible. Under this new regulation it will now be possible to get the information regarding the grade back to the farmer, as was requested by the producers' representative at the 1927 Swine Conference in Ottawa. This is the only new feature included in the new regulations, and all other changes, which have been made are simply a strengthening of the wording of the regulations from a legal standpoint with a view to eliminating as far as possible the need for litigation in their enforcement.

JURIST'S ERROR SENDS MAN TO JAIL FOR 82 YEARS

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa.—An error by a feeble jurist in making out his commitment papers sent Jack Randall to be sent to prison for 82 years, where he had been sentenced to from one to 15 years. The error is about to be corrected and Randall has been promised a pardon this week.

Randall already has been in prison 11 years, far longer than his correct sentence should have demanded him. But Judge Milo P. Smith, who sentenced him, wrote "consequently" where he should have written "concurrently".

The youth he was then 17 was found guilty on six counts of forgery, against Smith and several years ago as an advanced age.

FOUR HUNGARY MAIDENS

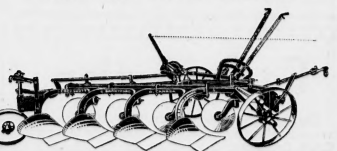

Four New Canadians from Hungary whose native dance delighted thousands at the Delta Pavilion at the annual festival recently brought to a conclusion at Regina, was a success. In attendance it eclipsed its forerunner at Winnipeg last year. Its handcraft exhibit covered a wide range, a more comprehensive program than the people of the West had been arranged for and, in the words of J. M. Gibson, sponsor of the festival, "Gastown has proved that within its borders are hidden the treasures of the world which will be built a structure of national culture finer than that of any other nation on earth." The hundred folk-dancers interpreted the dances of many racial groups. Folk-singers numbered over a hundred and sixty. Handcrafts were shown in thousands and it is safe to say that next year's festival, which is already being planned, will receive still greater support and present a follow-up program to be presented on the continent. The festivals have been arranged under the auspices of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HEARD ON THE STREET

When Adam in bliss,
Asked Eve for a kiss,
She puckered her lips with a coo;
With looks quick ecstatic,
She answered emphatic
"I don't care Adam, if I do!"
"To my mind," said Jim Weir, "that is one of Bill Shakespeare's choicest poems."

Mother—What kind of a show did papa take you to see while you were in the city?

Vincent—It was a dandy show, mamma, with ladies dressed in stockings clear up to their necks.

Little Betty had contracted a case of mumps. Asked if the trouble was very painful, she replied: "Awful! It hurts just like having the tummyache in my face."

First woman—I think the way she treats her husband is positively awful.
Second woman—Well, to say the least, she's awfully positive.

"Do you sell tires on credit?" asked the motorist.

"No," said Billy Gray of the tire and battery shop, "the only thing you can have charged here is your battery."

A young man whose knowledge of cards was extremely visionary was expected to complete a bridge four. After a few moments he committed his first mistake by throwing away a king on a trick already taken by his opponent's ace. "Good heavens!" bellowed Ernie Whiteside, stung to fenshish wrath by the dreadful sight. "A king doesn't usually beat an ace, you know." "I know," stammered the wretched beginner, "but I thought I'd let it have a try."

"Do you believe that we should have a more elastic currency?" asked Fred Dunn, who always talks national finance.

"Not much!" snorted Percy Pariah. "It's elastic enough now. What they ought to do is make it more adhesive."

Harold Smith was telling when in town a few days ago about a sign in a music store which reads: "Kiss the Girl You Love" and many others just as good."

O'Brien was working in a factory, and one day received notice by letter that his services were no longer required. However, several days later Pat turned up at the factory ready for work. The foreman was amazed at the boldness.

"I thought I advised you by letter that your services were no longer required."

"Sure ye did, but you put on the envelope 'return in five days.' So here I am."

"Yes," said Pat: "First I was plain Hoolley. Then I became Mr. Hoolley and next Alderman Hoolley. Well, to cap the lot, the other mornin', as I was going into church, the whole congregation arose and with one accord sang: 'Hoolley, Hoolley, Hoolley.'"

A clergyman once said to a little girl: "Ethel, you seem to be a bright little girl can you repeat a verse from the Bible?"

"I'll say I can," replied Ethel.

"Very well, my dear," answered the clergyman; "which one is it?"

"The Lord is my shepherd—I should sorry!"

Aunt Het says—"I reckon the most aggravatin' thing about a husband is that he won't say what he wants for dinner."

Grand-daughter (being lectured)—"I seem to have heard that girls of your period 'set their caps' for men."

Disapproving Grandmother—"But not their knee-caps."

"You sing beautifully 'Mr. Swenson'!"

"Have you heard me over the radio?" asked Jim.

"Yes, over the radio, the piano, my son's saxophone, and even the noise the babies make!"

Curate—Do you believe in dreams, Willoughby?

Willoughby—I used to, sir, but I don't now.

"And why not?"

"I married one five years ago."

An enthusiastic fisherman was telling Jim Moran about a proposed fishing trip to a lake in Scotland.

"Are there any trout there?" asked Jim.

Jim Gunn was telling W. S. Peterson about a Scotchman having presented his fiancée with an engagement ring. The Aberdeen changed his mind and wanted to break off the match.

He asked that the ring should be returned to him, but the girl protested that she couldn't get it off her finger, whereupon the Aberdeen changed his mind again and married her.

Customer—That chicken I bought yesterday had no wishbone.
Bill Wilkinson—He was a 'appy and contented bird, ma'am and, had no use for a wish bone.

A motorist was stopped by a Calgary policeman, an Irishman, who inquired if he had a license.

"Certainly I have a license," said the motorist.

"Where is it?" asked the constable.

"In my pocket book," was the reply.

"That's all right then," said the other gendarm.

"If ye've got it, but if ye didn't have one I'd have to see it."

Uncle—"My nephew, Jim Gannon, the aviation student, writes me as how he did his first 'solo' on Wednesday. He was 2,000 feet in the air."

Uncle—"Well, if Jim is going to practice singing, that's the place for him to do it, his singing is worse than—"

ANXIETY IS CAUSED BY RULING OF COURTS ON DIVORCES WON IN U.S.

OTTAWA—The decision of the Quebec courts that divorces granted in a foreign country cannot be recognized in that province and that people who have been married in Quebec, divorced outside of the Empire and remarried are guilty of bigamy, has caused grave anxiety at Ottawa as to the position of hundreds of persons, twice married, who live in the other provinces.

The legal position is in some doubt and it is not improbable that a test case will be made to determine the status of remarried persons in the other provinces. The law officers of the crown have declined to comment on the situation, but it is pointed out by the officials of the senate, who keep track of the divorces granted to Canadians, both in Canada and elsewhere, that more Canadians obtain divorces in the United States than in this Dominion. Of course this applies chiefly to Ontario and in this regard it is interesting to know that while 200 divorces were granted by parliament to Ontario citizens last year, 148 divorces were granted to Ontarians in Detroit.

The problem in the western provinces is not quite the same, since they have their own divorce courts, but it is pointed out that many westerners have gone to the United States for divorce because they could not meet the statutory conditions imposed by the Canadian laws. A considerable number of Manitobans obtained divorces last year in Minneapolis and St. Paul and the supposition is that these people could not have given the statutory proof necessary to obtain a divorce in the Manitoba courts. Likewise the citizens of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia continue to go to the States in large numbers for divorces.

If the interpretation placed upon divorce laws by the Quebec court applies in the west, then these people who have remarried have committed bigamy and are liable to prosecution and imprisonment.

PIGEONS ARE USED IN BLACKMAIL SCHEME

NEW YORK.—A novel method of blackmail, which was utilized in an effort to extort $10,000 from him, has been reported to detectives by Dr. Louis Alofsin of this city.

According to Dr. Alofsin, about March 3 last a man called at his office and insisted on seeing him, but when informed by his secretary that Dr. Alofsin was not at home, left, saying the doctor would hear from him later.

On March 10, Dr. Alofsin said, a package containing two carrier pigeons was left at his home, and with the package a note ordering him, under threat of death, to put a $10,000 bill in a small silk bag attached to the leg of the female pigeon, and release it.

After consulting detectives, Dr. Alofsin, it is said, put a note in the bag saying that the amount was too much to be entrusted to a pigeon, but advising the blackmailer that if he called personally at the doctor's home the money would be waiting for him.

Detectives then released the pigeons and with high-powered field glasses watched their flight. The birds flew north over Tenth avenue, then turned to the west, and headed for Jersey, and soon disappeared from view.

A few days later Dr. Alofsin received a note mailed from the general post office in New York saying that the birds would be returned to him. The note, it is said, advised him that if he did not return the money by the pigeons this time, every one in his family would be killed.

A police guard has been stationed at the doctor's home.

EFFECT UPON CANADIAN TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

The question of tariff barriers to trade is discussed by the Christian Science Monitor from the angle of the effect upon the good relations existing between Canada and the United States and upon the flourishing trade in Canada now being carried on by the American people.

It says: "Canada will watch the present session of the Congress at Washington with particular interest. Proposals to increase the United States tariff may affect Canadian trade. The existing tariff has tended to restrict the movement of Canadian produce southward across the border line. The tariff against fish from Canadian sources is regarded as having done damage to the fishing industry of the Maritime Provinces. The agricultural industry in Canada likewise felt the effect of the Fordney tariff increases. Another increase would be calculated severely to shake the confidence of the Canadian people in the expression of neighborly regard which are made from time to time by statements at Washington.

Responsible leaders in Congress and in American public life generally will doubtless give serious thought to the possible effect of more tariff protectionism on the present good relations, as well as on the flourishing trade conditions, which have been built up between the United States and Canada.

Trade can prosper only when it is based on confidence. Much of the great work of development on the North American continent, the building of canals, railways, airways, water powers, and the exploitation of natural resources, in the years ahead, will be influenced by the maintenance of neighborly relations, including mutually beneficial trade relations, between the Dominion and the great Republic to the south. It should be clearly understood at Washington, as it is at Ottawa, that higher barriers to trade cannot under any circumstances be of benefit to North America. The general effect would be exactly the reverse. No nation can live unto itself alone, under the present economic conditions. A very elaborate protectionist system has been built up in the United States, but protectionism cannot afford to do an injury to a friendly neighbor, particularly to such a good customer as Canada.

COMMUNITY IMPROVEMENT IS REACHED BY COMMUNITY SPIRIT

The desire for happiness in this world is the primary object in life of the average man. To attain this condition of happiness makes the world a better place to live in or to obtain his happiness in, and unless humanity as a whole works together to improve the world the individual members of society fail to find happiness in life. The community is the world in miniature, so, like the world, it depends upon the co-operation of all its citizens to make it a better and happier residence for the individual. There is nothing in the way of community improvement that cannot be accomplished by a proper application of community spirit. Community spirit is merely the uniting and pooling into activity of the desire of its individual citizens for a better city.

Petty differences of opinion, prejudices, selfish interests and other barriers to a united community must be overcome by individual citizens before the community can prosper much. It is only when every citizen becomes proud of the home town and puts his shoulder to the wheel of community improvement that the hopes and ambitions for the future of the city take substantial form. By working together for community betterment the people work for the advancement of their individual selves.

overlook the fact that the more the Soviet prospers the greater its funds for prosecuting revolutionary propaganda. Whatever may be the patriotic attitude of the individual, it would be eminent folly for a Government to pursue a course which would put the country's neck into the Soviet noose.

The onus is not on Canada, but Russia. Let that country begin by withdrawing the agents which it now has abroad in the land and purge itself of the evil in its system by adopting an honest attitude toward other countries. After it has done those things and shows that its policy is permanent it may be entitled to consideration, but not before.

ARTIFICIAL WOOL BEING TESTED BY YORKSHIRE MILLS

LONDON.—It is reported here that 20 Yorkshire mills are now testing an artificial wool known as "N.T." made by a process invented by Viallet, a Frenchman, which is expected to duplicate the success of artificial silk. The man-made fabric is reported to possess the characteristics of natural wool, but to cost only a third as much as medium grade scoured wool. The product is said to be based on waste vegetable fibre, which is transformed chemically.

Some spinners are making yarns from a mixture of half "N.T." and half natural wool. The result is reported to be found suitable for cheap blankets, felt, edgings, carpets and automobile upholstery.
